

The Soviet firm that wasn't

By DAVID LANDAU

Jerusalem Post Diplomatic Correspondent

The latest "straw in the wind" ostensibly blowing between Moscow and Jerusalem fell with an embarrassing thud last night when it turned out that the "official Soviet trading company" which had offered to do business with Israel was not Soviet at all.

"Intorg," whose letter to the Tel Aviv Chamber of Commerce had triggered a new wave of speculation about an impending Kremlin thaw towards Israel, is in fact a German-owned, Paris-based firm with an office suite in a large Moscow hotel. Its letter heading displays the Moscow address prominently — and this apparently was what misled the Tel Aviv Chamber of Commerce into believing the letter was Kremlin-inspired.

The letter and the political speculation surrounding it were the talk of political Jerusalem yesterday and were prominently featured in a number of newspapers. Foreign media, picking up the Israeli excitement, also reported and commented on this possible harbinger of a shift in Soviet Mideast policy.

The mistake became known when an irate official of Intorg telephoned the German Press Agency's Tel Aviv correspondent to set the facts straight. The Tel Aviv Foreign Ministry, while not doubting the Soviet identity of the company, sought during yesterday to damp down the enthusiastic speculation it had triggered. Officials said the commercial overture might well be bereft of any political implications.

In Washington, writes Wolf Blitzer, the Ministry's Director-General, Prof. Shlomo Avineri, when questioned about the affair before the error became known, also played it down, noting that commercial relations "are no substitute for diplomatic relations."

Nevertheless, Avineri, who came to Washington to address a Jewish group and to meet with American officials, told Israeli reporters that disclosure of the Soviet Union's willingness to resume trade with Israel "did not surprise me."

He said that Moscow has been trying to create the impression for several months that it was changing its negative attitude towards Israel in order to improve its public relations image in America and to strengthen its position as co-chairman of the Geneva Middle East peace conference.

At least one man in Jerusalem who was not misled by the "Soviet" business overture was ex-ambassador to London Gideon Rafael. Rafael, now an adviser to Foreign Minister Allon, told The Post yesterday morning that he "smelt something fishy" about the affair and frankly doubted if "Intorg" was a Soviet concern at all.

IDF hits Comptroller's report

By HIRSH GOODMAN

Post Military Correspondent

At a hastily convened meeting yesterday, two senior military officers attacked the State Comptroller's report on the Israel Defence Forces, published yesterday.

They said they were not taking issue with the contents of the report and that all its facts were accurate, but that the Comptroller had created an erroneous impression among the public by taking things out of context.

They contended that in spite of the shortcomings mentioned by the Comptroller (who was very critical of the standards of storage of the country's emergency stores), Israel's standby capability and state of alert was high, and had in no way been impaired.

The two officers said they had told the Comptroller and his staff, before the report was published, that the manner of its wording would create a wrong impression, and was unfair.

The Comptroller, for example, they said, had reported that in a certain call-up exercise, 54 per cent of those called did not return their call-up slips. The officers contended that in call-up exercises last year, the average over all responses was very high both when prior notice had been given and for surprise call-ups.

The officers said it was true that the stores checked by the Comptroller were short of the standards and quantities established theoretically, and which appeared in the official papers. "But in order for us to reach the theoretical levels," one of the officers said, "the country would have to be prepared to spend a very large sum."

They claimed that they had explained to the Comptroller that the theoretical quantities indicated the desirable and not the necessary in order to win a war.

They went on to say that because of the relative impoverishment of the armed forces, many of the vehicles kept in emergency stores are used for manoeuvres. "With the full knowledge that we do not have the manpower to get them back into 'store-room' shape" after they are returned from the field.

With regard to revelations that Air Force officers wasted millions on flying home in military aircraft, the officers said that this was a policy which had been sanctioned by the IDF's highest echelons and that it was intended to allow men in key positions to be minutes, rather than hours, away from where they may be needed at short notice. They conceded, however, that they were shocked by the fact that one base commander and his deputy had used a Fuga Magister trainer, at IL3,300 per hour, to fly home several times a week. They admitted that this had been an "error in judgement."

Likud, DMC blame Peres

for report critical of IDF

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT

Jerusalem Post Political Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Likud and the Democratic Movement for Change yesterday charged Defence Minister Shimon Peres with the responsibility for the serious shortcomings that the State Comptroller found in the army.

The Comptroller's findings that emergency stores were below specified standards and the indications of thefts possibly amounting to millions of pounds in most installations visited were as grave as he faults, that the Agranat Committee found in the emergency stores when it studied the mishaps of the Yom Kippur War, they said.

Because of a special demand by more than 30 Likud MKs, speaker Israel Yehayahu has called a special Knesset session at 10 a.m. Monday to discuss the Comptroller's findings.

The Likud and DMC attacks were directed at Peres as Labour's candidate for Prime Minister and because the report on the army was particularly critical.

DMC leader Amnon Rubinstein said in Ashdod yesterday that Peres ought to quit immediately as Defence Minister and acting Prime Minister "to prevent another mishap."

Likud leader Simba Ehrlich declared that "Peres failed as Defence Minister. Is he going to be Prime Minister?"

"There never was a report as scathing as this one," Ehrlich stated. "The Comptroller usually uses reserved language, so the fact he came out as sharply as he did proves the situation is terrible," he added, also claiming that parts of the report were not published because of security considerations.

The DMC's Shmuel Tamir and the Likud's Menahem Savidor argued that if Peres had paid less time to advancing his political career and more to supervising the defence establishment, the army wouldn't face such a disgracing report.

Labour also was undecided on how to meet the challenge. Its campaign manager, Minister of Commerce and Industry Haim Bar-Lev, told The Jerusalem Post that "I haven't read the report yet. I didn't hear what the army had to say and I didn't visit any emergency store."

Gur: Only 8 Agranat ideas not implemented

RISHON LEZION. — The Israel Defence Forces have fully implemented the Agranat Commission's recommendations, except 8 which the Chief of Staff did not find valid, the C-o-S, Rav-Aluf Mordechai Gur, said yesterday.

Speaking at a symposium on "Food in the IDF," Gur said the Government and Defence Ministry had been informed accordingly.

Referring to the recourse to the news media by reservists concerning military matters, Gur stressed that all soldiers, including reservists, who turn to the media without the express permission of the proper authorities will be brought to trial.

Major U.S. effort to renew Geneva

By WOLF BLITZER

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The U.S. yesterday stressed that it will be making a major effort to reconvene the Geneva Middle East peace conference during the latter part of this year.

A State Department spokesman said that a resumption of the Geneva talks was the only option the U.S. government was now considering. He tried to correct the impression left on Tuesday by President Carter, who said that it would be better not to go to Geneva unless there were good prospects for achievements there.

American sources here stressed that the ambassadors of Egypt, Saudi Arabia and other Arab countries had expressed their concern to the State Department after Carter's remarks, because their governments were worried that the U.S. was bailing second thoughts about pressing for a Geneva conference. The State Department's strong reiteration of the American desire to convene Geneva this year was seen here as a response to these expressions of Arab concern.

Speaking to reporters as Jordan's King Hussein was winding up his visit here, Department spokesman Hoddling Carter yesterday told reporters that the U.S. has not changed its strong commitment to make a major effort at reconvening Geneva this year. He said that Carter has been encouraged about such prospects following his initial round of talks with the leaders of Israel, Egypt and Jordan.

The spokesman said the U.S. has not yet worked out a timetable for reconvening Geneva because the President has not concluded his meetings with the interested Arab leaders. He is to meet in Geneva next month with Syrian President Assad and later in the month in Washington with Saudi Prince Fahd.

The State Department yesterday officially announced the May 11 meeting between Israel Foreign Minister Yigal Allon and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in London. The department said it had requested the meeting so that Vance could report to Allon on the Carter-Assad talks.

Israel Ambassador Simcha Dinitz has been asked by Allon to join him in London for those talks.

Dinitz was supposed to meet with Vance yesterday to hear about President Carter's talks with Hussein, but the State Department forgot to notify Dinitz about the session. Officials said that a secretary at the department simply forgot to telephone Dinitz's secretary to schedule the meeting, which was listed on Vance's public calendar.

Israeli and U.S. officials said that the Vance-Dinitz meeting would be re-scheduled for either today or tomorrow, depending on the two men's schedules.

Hussein: Ready for ties with 'entity'

WASHINGTON (AP). — King Hussein said yesterday that Jordan is ready to establish ties with a Palestinian "national entity."

"We in Jordan will respect the decision of the Palestinian people," Hussein said in a speech to the Middle East Institute.

"If it is to be a Palestinian state, we accept that. If it is to be affiliated with Jordan, we would welcome the resumption of naturally brotherly ties."

Treasury expected to concede Eban's permit

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Treasury is expected to officially confirm today that Abba Eban did indeed receive a permit to hold foreign currency abroad in 1967. This has already been attested to by Dr. Zvi Dinstein, the government's top energy adviser, who was Deputy Finance Minister at the time.

Eban places major importance on the Treasury's official recognition of the fact that he did have a permit (though no copy of it can be found today). Sources close to him said he feels it would indeed have been "an enormity" had he set about earning money abroad from his books without asking official permission to hold a foreign bank account. His applying for and obtaining the permit, he feels, renders his subsequent holding of currency abroad — even in greater sums than initially in 1967 — morally, politically and legally proper.

Five wounded in Beirut blast

Jerusalem Post Staff

Five persons were wounded by a powerful explosion which rocked the southwestern sector of Beirut late yesterday afternoon, according to Arab radio stations. The source of the blast was not disclosed.

Southern Beirut earlier this week was the scene of violent clashes between radical Palestinian and leftist elements, and Syrian peacekeeping troops.

The Syrians were reported to be combating the eastern Lebanese Bekaa region, where Palestinian-leftist forces have been reorganizing.

Assad threatens another war

Jerusalem Post Staff

Syrian President Hafez Assad last night said that the Arabs would resort to force again unless Israel withdraws to pre-1967 war borders and recognizes the Palestinian national rights.

Assad said that Egypt, Syria and Jordan would not hesitate to opt for military action if efforts failed to solve the Middle East conflict peacefully.

The Syrian leader, who is due to meet U.S. President Jimmy Carter next month, spoke at a news conference in Damascus shortly after conferring with British Foreign Secretary David Owen.

Lone Jordanian fires on army patrol

Jerusalem Post Staff

An Israeli border patrol yesterday came under fire from a single Jordanian soldier in the el-Hamma area at the junction of the Israeli frontier with Jordan and Syria below the Golan Heights, the army spokesman announced. There were no casualties in what appeared to be the first incident on the Jordanian border in several years.

The Jordanians themselves claimed that it was their own soldier who came under fire, adding that he was injured and transferred to hospital. The soldier was reported to be out of danger.

Talks deadlocked at midnight Technicians ready to strike

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Efforts to avert an all-out strike by some 25,000 technicians appeared deadlocked late last night as representatives of the Technicians Union and the Histadrut tried to reach a settlement with Treasury officials.

At midnight, Histadrut Secretary-General Yehoram Meshel said he was optimistic about the chances of averting the strike by this morning; but technicians' representative Zalman Shenkman remained adamant, saying he saw no concrete progress towards the technicians' demands.

The union turned down a request from Ben-Gurion Airport to release the technicians who control the airport's electronic matrix from the strike. Should efforts to stop the strike fail, most flights from Ben-Gurion will be delayed or cancelled. Another immediate effect of the strike would be the cancellation of all television and radio broadcasts except for Arabic programmes and news in all languages.

The Central Elections Committee is also trying to persuade the technicians to release some workers from the strike so that election propaganda, which was supposed to be aired starting tonight, could be broadcast.

The talks began at 7 p.m. in the Histadrut building; but at 10 p.m. a representative of the technicians told The Jerusalem Post: "We have only accomplished five centimetres of the metre we are demanding. If negotiations continue at this snail's pace, a strike seems inevitable."

At midnight, Acting Premier Shimon Peres called Meshel out of the meeting room. After their conversation, Meshel returned to the talks without saying what had been discussed.

Should the strike break out and continue for a few days, there may be shortages of water and electricity which would force some industrial plants to cut down their staff.

Ze'ev Lazar, who represents the technicians, told The Jerusalem Post that the main demand was "equal pay for equal work," no matter what title the person doing the work held.

In Israel, he said, there are three distinct grades of persons engaged in technology and engineering. The first is the technician, who receives 1,800 hours of instruction; the second is the senior technician or practical engineer (in Hebrew, haddassit), with 3,000 hours of study; and finally the diploma engineer, who holds a university degree.

It is the lower two grades who are threatening to strike.

According to an agreement signed by the government on February 21, all three grades were to be paid according to the work they perform, and not according to their title.

But in a separate agreement, the government agreed to pay the diploma engineers a "special education allowance" retroactive to September 1975. The other two grades were to receive retroactive pay only from April 1976.

The government also refused to fix a proper starting grade for the lower two grades and to pay them overtime and standby pay. Finally, the technicians say, the government prefers to employ diploma engineers due to their college degree.

In the talks the technicians were represented by Ze'ev Lazar, Zalman Shenkman and Ram Sheffi; the Histadrut by Secretary-General Yehoram Meshel and Uriel Abrahamowicz; and the government by Amiram Sivan, director-general of the Finance Ministry, Ephraim Yermans of the Treasury's wages office, and Civil Service Commissioner Ya'acov Nitzan.

Officers make new offer as Zim threatens to fire crews

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER

Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA. — As Zim prepared to fire the crews of ten ships and sell five of the vessels, the marine officers, in the fourth week of their strike, seemed to be retreating from their firm demand to maintain the differential between their rates of pay and those of the ratings.

Officers' Union secretary Yehayahu Groman last night suggested that the shipping companies apply the "clause 13" in the ratings' labour contract to the officers as well. This would grant them, too, extra pay for "special jobs" which has eroded the differential and often raises ratings' pay over that of officers. They serve under Groman said if the companies agreed the officers would return to work at once.

Zim general manager Yehuda Rotem said last night that he would not negotiate with the union through the press, but if it presented the offer to the companies association, "it will be discussed."

Captain Groman told The Jerusalem Post he had reached the conclusion that his union was not strong enough to enforce the house cleaning the merchant navy desperately needed. He had therefore decided to "acquiesce to the sick situation, and continue to sail through the sea of lies and corruption surrounding the fleet."

Earlier the union had received a written demand from Uriel Abrahamowicz, head of the Histadrut Trade Union Department, for an unequivocal answer to the Southern Lebanon villagers work in Israel again

Jerusalem Post Staff
HAIFA. — Some 540 men and women from the nearby Maronite Christian village of Alma el-Sha'ah in southern Lebanon have been coming to work every day in Israel. The villagers also have been visiting this kibbutz and going on pilgrimages to Nazareth, Jerusalem and Bethlehem. The renewed crossings into Israel have been allowed by the Christian militia commander in the village despite the emergency he declared recently about a possible Palestinian terrorist attack. Armed men belonging to a Palestinian-terrorist alliance earlier this week killed a 17-year-old boy in the village. The management of the Magen David Adom in Haifa this week transferred medical supplies for treating casualties of the fighting in Lebanon to representatives of Israel's Maronite community. These supplies will be turned over tomorrow to the Kila area in southern Lebanon, through the Good Fence at Metulla.

German, two Dutch 'Righteous Gentiles' honoured today

A German who saved dozens of Jews in the Vilna Ghetto during World War II, at risk to his own life, and three Dutch citizens who similarly displayed valour, will receive "Righteous Gentiles" medallions and plant trees in the Avenue of Righteous Gentiles in Jerusalem today. Yad Vashem in Jerusalem today.

The German, Oskar Schoenbrunner, whose ceremony will take place at 9:30 a.m., managed a "war-vital" sewing workshop in Vilna for the German authorities in 1940-1943. All through that period, he hid Jews in the workshop premises. In 1943, when the Germans started mass liquidating all the remaining Jews in Vilna, he hid them in the workshop. After the war, he made a point of going to testify in the trial of war criminals whose activities he had witnessed.

Sjoerd and Aukje Zwaagstra, farmers in Midlum, Friesland, Holland, hid Jews and non-Jews hunted by the Nazis on their farm. (One of these, Haya Rahamin, is today a member of Kibbutz Kinneret.) In addition, during the war they supplied food to Jewish underground fighters. The Yad Vashem citation notes that of 19 farming families in their vicinity, the Zwaagstras, devout Catholics, were the only ones to help Jews, and that a priest in their vicinity who had been suspected of hiding Jews was arrested by the Germans and never again seen alive.

Nel Oushout, a well-known Dutch stage actress, is here as guest of several of the many Jews she saved. In addition to helping hide people, she formed a theatrical troupe, gave clandestine performances in private homes, took in hoodlums, and raised money for the Dutch underground.

The ceremony for the Zwaagstras and Oushout will take place at 11 a.m. KUPAT HOLIM's acting chairman, Prof. Haim Doron, was elected chairman yesterday by the Kupat Holim central committee. Doron was appointed acting chairman when Asher Yadin was suspended. To EL AL BOARDING cards and IL5,000 in cash were stolen yesterday from a check-in counter at Ben-Gurion Airport. The boarding cards and cash were in a metal box behind the counter which the thief stole when the El Al stewardess left the counter unattended.

Intorg

His doubts were aroused by a facsimile of the letter from Intorg printed by "Tedit Aharonot." Rafael, an experienced diplomat who has been to Moscow, noticed that the firm's Moscow address was given as Kizil Ukhara, Chombar 601, not the sort of address one would expect from a Moscow-based commercial enterprise. Rafael also pointed out that the letter did not actually say anywhere that Intorg was a Russian firm, nor indeed that it was proposing to sell Russian goods to Israel. The co-owner and business manager of the West German Intorg, Mrs. Elka Lehmann-Altenbrandt, said yesterday in Frankfurt that she was disturbed to learn that her firm had been misrepresented in Israel as a Soviet company. She said she had just returned from a business trip to Moscow and was worried about the possible Soviet reaction to these stories.

Zvi Amit, director of the Tel Aviv Chamber of Commerce, told the Post yesterday that "the entire matter is being thoroughly investigated." Amit said Intorg is the Russian acronym for "International Trade Organization," which he said was an official Russian government export company. He said if Intorg was indeed a West German company, this was "a strange way to do business — using a Russian name." However, trade circles in Tel Aviv yesterday said they believed the letter was bona fide, represented the Russian Intorg company, and had been sent to test public reaction in Israel.

See how they run

By Asher Wallfish

Some parties may be promising the moon in the present election campaign, but the Alignment's Number One man, Shimon Peres, who is traditionally far-sighted, promises... the sun. Peres told 85 scientists in Haifa that he would soon set up a team to draft a comprehensive programme for the exploitation of solar energy.

Peres got a congratulatory cable from an old buddy in France, Jacques Soustelle, as well as one from an Englishman who, as it happens, admires Israel's archaeological achievements: David Astor, one of the owners of "The Observer."

Chairman Shimon uttered a warning at two Druze villages in Western Galilee, Jula and Yerka, "about people who want to drive a wedge between the Druze and the Jews." Peres said that wise and tolerant partnership would be the guideline. "The Government will help the Druze in Israel to live by their own spiritual values, their sacred scriptures and their links with their brothers in the neighbouring countries."

The Likud's telephone-answering team is being kept busy these days. Tal-Aluf (Res.) Mordechai Zippori is replying to queries from potential voters on security; Gola Cohen, MK on education; and Yoram Aridor, MK, on social betterment.

Minister-without-Portfolio Gideon Hausner issued a stentorian demand for compulsory arbitration in essential services, now that "billions of pounds have been squandered, Israel's good name has been severely damaged, as well as its creditworthiness in world markets, and there are dangers of unemployment and slow-down." Hausner placed the blame squarely on "the barren Socialist dogmatism of the Alignment leadership."

Moshe Dayan, MK, drew hecklers in Beer Tuvia on Tuesday night at the "Ein Vered Circle" rally demanding mass settlement and annexation of Judea and Samaria. The shouts swelled to a roar when he said that settlement in Judea and Samaria must only be with Government permission, and that it must be with the consent of the Jewish people. Dayan said: "I oppose withdrawal from Judea and Samaria. But I favour taking part in the Geneva conference, unconditionally, and so I do not believe we must carry out any annexations at the present time."

Shavit rejects Histadrut call for wage increase

By MACABEE DEAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter
TEL AVIV. — The 1,200 members of the Manufacturers Association yesterday were called upon to "stand firm and not kneel in" to the Histadrut's demand for an immediate 4.75 per cent wage hike.

Avraham (Buma) Shavit, president of the association, declared that the association will "extend every possible help to any member whose workers are enticed by the Histadrut to undertake illegal sanctions to force us to break legal labour contracts." He added that "we will go to the courts and we will win."

(Yerucham Meshel, secretary-general of the Histadrut, has reiterated his demand that the private sector, which produces about 70 per cent of the manufactured goods in Israel, give its industrial workers the 4.75 per cent wage hike. He has persuaded the Histadrut-owned companies, such as the Koor complex and the government-controlled companies, to do the same.)

At a press conference yesterday, Shavit said that "we will not be dragged into becoming part and parcel of the anarchy which is running wild in the country today. Look about you, and you will see a situation where the law is being ignored — look how drivers ignore every possible traffic regulations where a firm promise is made only to be broken, where a signed contract is not worth the paper it is written on."

He stressed that he, as well as other members of the association, justify the "strike as a legitimate weapon of the worker. But we cannot justify a strike where they gain a stranglehold on some part of the alongside Mekorot's director-general Ze'ev Kariv. This is delicate, says Meav, because Kariv's case is now being considered by the High Court as a result of an appeal by the public prosecution against Kariv's acquittal in the District Court, on mismanagement and malfeasance charges.

"Get off the grass, you chaps," the National Parks Authority has ordered the political parties. It has prohibited all election rallies and meetings in the parks. The people should picnic in peace and not have loudspeakers blaring propaganda into their ears, the Authority said. Anyway, the rallies make a mess.

District Court Judge David Wallach, chairman of the regional elections committee for the Dan-South area, has warned four parties that if they don't name their representatives to the polling station committees in time, they'll lose out. Where are you, then, NRP, Aguda, Poalei Aguda and the Democratic Front for Peace and Equality? Wake up!

The Democratic Front spokesman Uri Burstein sent a telegram yesterday to Defence Minister Peres rebuking him for "harassing" the mayor of Nahal Basma Shaleh, who was summoned to the military government and warned, in connection with this week's riots in the West Bank town.

Rael Teitelbaum of Shell wonders why people only talk about Labour men with foreign currency accounts abroad. The Herut party has a company in Vaduz, he recalls, under the name of T.H. Establishments. So Teitelbaum asks ingenuously: "Does Herut have a licence from the Controller of Foreign Currency?"

A Likud source commented on this: "Teitelbaum should stop babbling." But Teitelbaum claims the Vaduz corporation was mentioned in District Court last year in the case of the creditors of Herut's Tel Hai fund. The Renana list, made up of Holocaust invalids and headed by Mordechai Hoffman, has appealed to the High Court because the Central Elections Committee disqualified it from running. Hoffman charged that the Committee chairman, Supreme Court Justice Eliahu Mann, ruled Renana out on a technicality, and moreover did not give them a chance to set the error right, while there was still plenty of time.

Samuel Flato Sharon, running on a one-man list, who is being sued in the Tel Aviv District Court by the U.S. architects firm of Greenfield and Sommer for $100,000, is suing them back in a New York court for $200,000. The litigation concerns a claim over rights to develop the Royal Manhattan Hotel which Flato bought recently.

Sea strike

Histadrut's proposals for ending the conflict, which had been worked out on Sunday.

Groman said the union council, which rejected the proposals on Monday, would convene today for a discussion but there was no chance that the proposals would be accepted.

At a press conference in the morning, Zim manager Rotem announced that the company's three-continent container service, its longest and most lucrative line, was coming to a standstill as a result of the strike. Zim would now have to cut its losses as much as possible, if the union did not accept the Histadrut proposals, "which we believe now represent the only possible solution to the conflict."

If the officers remained obstinate, said Rotem, Zim would today discontinue the use of test ships now anchored in Haifa without cargo, and send another 100 officers on unpaid leave. Five of the ships, all of them obsolete, would be put up for sale. Two new ships, due for delivery this month, would not be put in service; Rotem stressed he was not issuing threats, but reacting to an intolerable situation of fully-manned ships not earning their keep.

At a union press conference, secretary Adam Chikil said the officers called for "constructive" government intervention, because the Histadrut had failed to "carry out its natural function of backing the officers."

Meanwhile the Ministries of Transport and Commerce yesterday informed the shippers council that the government would not cover part of the $300,000 expenses involved in transferring the cargo discharged in Naples by the American freighter Export Freedom to Haifa. The government could not cover losses incurred by strikes, the ministries told the council.

The German buyers of IL20, of aluminium dies stuck in the freighter Tilia here for the past three weeks, yesterday informed the manufacturers, the Jerusalem Midtural factory, that they would sue for damages for the non-delivery of the goods, for which their own clients were waiting. Another German firm, which is a steady customer for Alliance tyres, asked the company to make all future shipments in German ships.

A group of officials is organising a demonstration today against the officers' strike and the government's apparent indifference to its effect on the economy. The protest will be staged outside Haifa port at four this afternoon.

Gymnast star Comaneci to perform in Israel

TEL AVIV. — Olympic super champion Nadia Comaneci will be in the Rumanian national women's gymnastic team which will give three exhibition performances here in August. Hapoel secretary Yitzhak Ofek told the press here yesterday. The Rumanian girls rate with the Russians as world leaders in gymnastics.

Ofek said Hapoel will mark May 1 with nation-wide sports competitions among workers' teams. The central event will be at the Wingate Institute near Netanya on Saturday where 44 workers' teams will compete in basketball, football, volleyball, tennis, table tennis, shooting, swimming and chess. At the Tel Aviv sports stadium on Saturday night, gymnastics will be the central event in a sports display.

Two Women thought murdered in Tel Aviv

TEL AVIV (Itim). — A 25-year-old woman with a bullet in her head was found last night in a car on the bank of the Yarkon River, in the Savit Quarter. She died on the way to the hospital. The woman whose name was not released last night, is believed to have been a resident of that northern quarter.

Two boys who had been playing in the area spotted the woman in a Renault with a foreign licence plate and called the police. She was still alive when a Magen David Adom ambulance arrived, but she was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital. Police believe she was murdered.

The body of another unidentified woman was found earlier on Rehov Hayarkon. There were signs of violence on the body.

Mekorot marks 40 years

TEL AVIV. — Water is to agriculture and to civilian life what weapons are to the army. Defence Minister Shimon Peres said last night at an assembly at the Mann Auditorium marking the 40th anniversary of the founding of the Mekorot water company.

DEIB EL-ASSAD, an Arab village in the western Galilee, will be linked to the national power grid according to an agreement reached between the Electric Corporation and the local council.

'Good' crowd at opening of Jerusalem Book Fair

By AARON SUTNER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

An opening-day crowd described as "good, but could be better" passed through the entrance to the eighth Jerusalem International Book Fair yesterday afternoon. But fair officials are hopeful traffic will increase as the exhibition continues.

Yesterday was the first day the public was admitted to the fair, held once every two years at Binyanei Ha'Ooma. More than a thousand foreign and local publishers and booksellers are participating.

The large Swiss national pavilion was still empty yesterday, with books selected for display tied up in strike-bound Haifa Port. But Geneva publisher M. Weber & Co. managed to open shop by flying in a special collection of beautiful art and architecture books.

Along the corridors and main halls were still thronged yesterday evening, and visitors had plenty of time to browse at ease without having to move on and make room for other visitors.

"I think the ILAS admission charge is a bit too steep, and that may be the reason for the sparse crowd," one Israeli book trade official said.

According to a survey released this week by the Central Bureau of Statistics, 3,332 books were published here last year — 198 fewer than in 1975. The total number of volumes printed also dropped, from 13 million to 11 million.

Emlyn Williams as Dylan Thomas

By MENDEL KOHANEK
Post Drama Critic

Emlyn Williams, the master reader of Dickens, gave a recital last night of readings from a writer light years away from the Victorian novelists.

Dylan Thomas was a living effluence, the beloved of the gods on whom abundant gifts were showered, who squandered them all. He was the golden boy of the Western world; the cherub with the vibrant magnetic voice; the hard who charmed radio and live audiences on both sides of the ocean with his living poetry; a legacy of his Welsh origin; one of those rare poets to whom poetry was a natural, organic means of expression. When he went, not so gently, into that good night — a dissipated, bloated, drink-soaked old man of 39 — he left behind not only a legend but a legacy of some of the finest poetry of our times.

He also wrote great prose pieces, memories of his childhood in Swansea and his youth in London, full of a wild humour verging on the grotesque. It was these reminiscences which Mr. Williams read.

Though personally frustrated at not hearing the Dylan Thomas I knew best in this performance at the Jerusalem Theatre, I marvelled at that the IDF has its own internal comptroller, who in the two months August and September, 1976 had checked out 88 units. This check, they said, had had one primary purpose: to spur the units to a high state of alertness and battle-readiness.

The officers produced lists to show that in almost all the units checked, the standard had been classified as "good" to "very good."

The two officers failed to deal with many of the other items mentioned in the Comptroller's report. They said that they had not done a final reading on some of the revelations — such as flights abroad.

Re-affirming the accuracy of many other findings, they expressed their "extreme disappointment" at the "anonymous impression" that the Comptroller had left with the public by publishing what they intimated were "half-truths."

2½ years for accidental slaying of wife

HAIFA. — A guard who pulled the trigger of his Uzi sub-machinegun without checking to see if it was loaded, and fired a burst that killed his wife, was yesterday sentenced to 2½ years in prison, and another 2½ years suspended. Mohammed Ali Marzouk, 26, of Arara village, was tried by a three-member bench in the Haifa District Court, which found "reasonable doubt" in the prosecution's charge that the killing had been premeditated. Marzouk had gone to the police immediately after the accident in his home last October 8. (Itim)

Of the titles published last year, 1,907 were first or revised editions, and 1,615 reprint issues. Most of the titles — 2,416 — came from trade publishers and the rest from public and institutional sources. The survey indicates foreign publishers' orders for Israel publishing and printing services waned, since the number of books printed in Hebrew constituted 88 per cent of the total as against 89 per cent last year. Five books out of the 200 entered in this year's Israel Museum international art book contest will be cited for excellence at ceremonies at the museum this afternoon. Winner of first prize is "Drawing a Creative Process," designed by Kurt Wirth and published by AB Verlag, Zurich. Wirth and his publisher won an all-expense-paid trip to Israel, and both will receive an original work of art by Amichai Shalev. The four silver medal winners are "Glad Knost," designed by Olof Ekvall of Sweden; "Vita Sacra Magica" by Antonio Grass of Colombia; "Anti-Object Art" by Lawrence Levy of Northwood College, Evanston, Illinois; and "Zeichensprache der Architektur" by Rolf Parfetti, Zurich. In the morning, economics and organization of scientific publishing will be discussed at a joint session of book publishers and scientific journal editors at the Van Leer Foundation.

Man found knifed on railway track

HAIFA (Itim). — A border police patrol found a man wounded from a knife attack lying on a railway track near Haifa yesterday morning. The wounded man, Mami Tuhil, 39, was taken to the Rambam hospital in Haifa, where he is now lying. The police have been unable to identify the man's attackers, and refused to reveal any details about the case. The police are now conducting an investigation to find out who attacked him. An investigation is under way.

Comptroller: Foreign Ministry cut U.S. information budget

Israel spent less in real terms on its information campaign in the U.S. in 1976 than in 1975. This is the most startling statistic revealed by the State Comptroller in his brief survey of the Foreign Ministry's haasbara (information) efforts in the U.S. The ministry spent $728,000 on information in the U.S. in 1976, and $701,000 — at 1976 American prices — in 1975 (the actual 1975 figure was $971,000). The 1976 expenditure represented a drop in relative terms too, when compared with overall ministry outlay on information. Thus in 1976 the information effort in the U.S. accounted for 20 per cent of the ministry's overall outlay for information; and in 1975 it was only 18 per cent. Similarly the 1976 figure represented 54 per cent of the total outlay by missions abroad on information; in 1975 it represented only 57 per cent of that total outlay.

1975, of which IL4.6m. was recouped from host governments and UN-affiliated agencies. (The budget prediction had been for IL7.6m. to be recouped from these sources.) Israeli-led projects were under way in 21 Latin American, six Asian and four African countries, while 838 Israeli experts were working on international cooperation projects abroad. (This figure includes 47 Israeli experts working for UN agencies.) And 833 people from developing countries were studying on cooperation-linked courses in Israel. The Comptroller pointedly queries whether the international cooperation department needed to spend IL570,000 in 1975 on its public relations efforts.

The subsidies racket
TAKE A SACKFUL of subsidized flour and stir with a bucket of subsidized water. Add a little (unsubsidized) fodder to taste, and feed the cattle. They will enjoy it. You will pay little, and the other taxpayers will carry the burden. This is only one feature of Israel's subsidy system as revealed by the State Comptroller.

For 1977 try a different recipe. Instead of flour use bread. Because bread is now cheaper than fodder and therefore more economical as food for animals. The poor taxpayer will still carry the burden.

Industrialists make a profit on both sides. When sugar was subsidized, until 1974, they bought it from the government stores. When sugar went up to IL5 per kilo and the international price went down to IL3 per kilo, they got a special permit to import cheap sugar. That might have been a good idea if the prices of goods produced with cheap sugar had also been reduced. This in fact may have happened, but no one knows the truth, because the price of sweets, to take just one example, is not controlled.

But when industry buys cheap sugar abroad, the Government is left with big stocks of expensive sugar. Who pays for these stocks? You're quite right: the taxpayer.

WHAT IS the subsidy on an egg? It is the difference between the cost of producing one egg and the price to the consumer. When the consumer price is known and fixed, it is profitable for the farmers to show that costs are high and thus to receive a bigger subsidy. But what is the 1977 cost of producing one egg? No one knows. The computation of present costs is based on the figures for 1974, readjusted for inflation. And the result: "The subsidies for producing eggs have been much higher than necessitated by real costs," says the State Comptroller.

The last major work by famed U.S. sculptor Alexander Calder, a 12-metre-high stable, is being erected at Jerusalem's Holland Square opposite Mt. Herzl. Calder, who died last November, picked the site himself during his first and only visit to Jerusalem in 1975. Calder left precise instructions for the mounting of the work, seen being unloaded at the site yesterday. The painted metal stable was completed in Tours, France, according to a Calder model. Lahat again raps Interior Ministry over Dizengoff

By SARAH HONIG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Mayor Shlomo Lahat yesterday reiterated his criticism of Ministry of Interior district representative David Reanik for how the ministry is handling the Dizengoff Circle face-lifting project. But he stressed that he had no intention of insulting him personally.

An evening newspaper reported that Lahat referred in a telephone conversation to Reanik as "an insect" and of having an attitude of "a small-time grocer."

Interior Minister Shlomo Hillel described Lahat's remarks as "belligerent and in poor taste." He said that because Reanik as a civil servant couldn't respond publicly to the criticism, the ministry was considering what action to take. Ministry personnel told The Jerusalem Post that they will cut off all ties with the municipality unless the mayor apologizes.

Lahat yesterday wrote Reanik and said that he "does not take back the severe criticism" he voiced over the way Reanik is performing his duties. Nevertheless, the mayor wrote he was not referring to Reanik personally but protesting against the ministry's handling of the project. Meanwhile, work on the circle is continuing despite the ministry's work stoppage order.

Eight Nabulsi arrested in anti-Kahane protest

NABLUS. — Eight local youths were arrested yesterday during a demonstration against Rabbi Meir Kahane's declared plans to lay the cornerstone for a Jewish quarter here on May 6. This was the second anti-Kahane demonstration here in two days.

The demonstrators lit bonfires in the streets and stoned troops, often with the help of catapults. They were swiftly dispersed with tear gas.

Religious leaders slam liberal proposals by prostitution panel

By HAIM SHAPIRO
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Religious leaders were ebarly critical yesterday of a Justice Ministry panel report which sought to liberalize laws regulating prostitution.

Ashkenazi Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren called the recommendations of the committee, headed by Tel Aviv District Court Judge Hadassa Ben-Itto, "a sad commentary on the lack of religious education of our people." "Prostitution," he said, "should be treated the way a disease is — with education. Permissive societies have ended in moral collapse." Being anti-prostitution laws, asserted the chief rabbi, would be another step in this direction.

Zvi Bernstein, Secretary-General of the National Religious Party, told The Jerusalem Post that the NRP had no official reaction to the report. "But," he added, "of course we are opposed to the whole approach that prostitution is something our society cannot do without. Our stand is that prostitution should be rooted out."

The police spokesman yesterday declined to comment on criticism of the police in the Ben-Itto report, published on Tuesday, claiming it was not "suitable" for the police to react to the findings of a ministerial committee.

The committee censured the police practice of regularly arresting prostitutes, holding them for up to 48 hours and then releasing them. One woman, the report said, described this as "a life sentence in installment." Another told the committee she had been picked up by the police 74 times in nine months. These arrests were illegal, the committee said, and brought no benefit.

It was also reported that prostitutes with infants were released immediately. This, the report said, led to a "commerce" in small children who were traded back and forth between the women.

The committee noted the irony of the present law by which a prostitute who worked quietly in her home or a hotel room was liable to a five-year term for running a brothel, and those who worked in the streets could only be prosecuted for the lesser offence of public indecency.

It was this paradox, the committee said, that led to the most controversial of their recommendations, to permit a prostitute to work in a home, hotel room, vehicle or boat. As it was impossible to eradicate prostitution, the committee said, it should be conducted in such a way as to give the least possible offence to the public.

Senior officials of the Welfare Ministry had not yet received the report by last night. However, Dr. Menahem Horowitz, head of the ministry's corrections division and a member of the Ben-Itto committee, said he thought their report was "reasonable," and "acceptable" to people who don't profess in their 20s, some had begun working as early as 13.

It called for the police to look out for girls liable to go into prostitution, to increase searches for run-away girls, and to give the police powers to pick up minors suspected of prostitution and bring them to treatment centres.

Before reaching their conclusions, the committee members spoke to a number of prostitutes on the streets as well as to seven women serving prison terms.

Although it could not determine the exact figures, the committee estimated that there were between 1,000 and 1,500 prostitutes, with the overwhelming majority in Tel Aviv. The city had some 800 to 900 streetwalkers, they said, and 50 massage parlours with an average of two women in each. There were also an estimated 80 to 70 "high class" prostitutes. There were about 120 prostitutes in Jerusalem and 80 in Haifa.

Tadmor named director of Aliya Centre

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Aliut-Miehne (res.) Yechayahu Tadmor, a former head of Gadna and director of Israel TV, has been formally appointed director of the Israel Aliya Centre in New York.

Tadmor, 43, is replacing Yehiel Leket, who returned to Israel several months ago to become an Alignment MK upon the death of Avraham Ofer. Born in Haifa, Tadmor studied sociology and political science at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem and philosophy and education at the Tel Aviv University.

Tadmor will be responsible for the work of all Aliya emissaries in the U.S. and Canada. There has been some criticism of his nomination from American immigrant groups, who charged that the World Zionist Organization did not consult them beforehand. They maintained that they preferred an American immigrant to hold the post.

As to whether a country is cheap or dear, it's not the prices that count. It's what you get for them.

Treasury official says budget cuts of IL5b. after poll

Jerusalem Post Staff

A senior Finance Ministry official says the state budget will have to be cut by IL5b. after the elections and advocates eliminating seven government ministries.

Sar-Shalom Shiran, in charge of budgets in the Treasury, speaking at a Defence Ministry seminar for administration and budgeting, said the government would have no alternative but to cut the 1977/78 budget by IL5b., of which IL3m.-IL4m. could represent cuts in real expenditure. (The remaining cuts would be necessitated by the increase in taxes, which was higher than that forecast by the original budget.)

Shiran — who stressed that he was speaking for himself — also said he could like to see a government made up of only 12 ministries, headed by a administration of the prime minister. He would abolish together the Ministries of Tourism, Social Welfare, Absorption, Labour, Religious Affairs, Communications and Police, as well as other government departments. (Leader, page 1b.)

A peek inside South Africa's top security prison

Life is forever on Robben Island

ROBBEN ISLAND, South Africa. — Nelson Mandela, spiritual leader of South Africa's black nationalist movement, spent the day hoeing the weeds on the front lawn of the Robben Island maximum security prison.

Beside him in the warm sun worked Herman J. J. van der Merwe, former leader of SWAPO, the South West Africa (Namibia) guerrilla movement. J. J. van der Merwe served nine years of a 20-year prison term.

Mandela, former president of the banned African National Congress (ANC), was brought to Robben Island in 1964 to begin a life sentence for plotting a revolution to overthrow the South African Government.

In terms of South African laws, life imprisonment means as long as the prisoner lives. There is no remission. A team of senior officials from the Department of Prisons, led by Maj. Gen. Roux, this week took local and foreign journalists for a first-ever visit to the island, lying about five kilometres off the coast of Cape Town.

Reason for the trip, officials said, was to give reporters the opportunity to check out allegations made overseas that Robben Island prisoners were ill-treated and tortured.

The UPI reporter saw nothing to confirm such reports. But the press party was not permitted to talk to any of the 370 prisoners, all blacks and all male. The reporters went on a conducted tour, strictly supervised, and their stories had to be vetted "for security reasons" before publication.

Roux told the reporters "you are here to ascertain for yourself in a general way, the conditions under which the security prisoners live. No one knows you are here, nothing has been staged," he said, before the tour of the jail started.

"This is not a five-star hotel, nor is it a kindergarten. It is a maximum security prison, and conditions here comply with this internationally accepted regulations laid down in the code of standards minimum rules."

The island is covered with scrub, pine trees and cypresses. It has a magnificent view of Table Mountain and the city of Cape Town below it. Ostriches and small deer run wild through the hush.

No prisoner has ever escaped from the island, which has been a penal colony and leper settlement since 1670. The icy Atlantic Ocean and strong currents are deterrent enough.

Rebels gone from Zaire province

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP). — Katangan rebels in southern Zaire were nowhere to be seen as government troops advanced rapidly toward the Angolan border, reporters leaving the area said yesterday.

Little fighting has been reported. Two soldiers were killed on Monday when government troops took over the railroad town of Mutshatsha and began moving west toward Dilolo on the Angolan border.

An estimated 2,000 Katangans, exiled to Angola since the early 1960s, invaded their former homeland of Shaba province last month and occupied a quarter of the mineral rich province without a struggle.

Two weeks ago the government organized a counter-offensive backed by 1,500 Moroccan troops.

Some military sources in Shaba believe the rebels may have abandoned their plan to set up an independent nation and have pulled back to Angola. The government drive wasn't meeting any resistance but was slowed by mines planted on the only road through the region.

All the villages in the area were abandoned, reporters said. Mutshatsha, a town of 7,000, was deserted when President Mobutu Sese Seko arrived by helicopter on Tuesday.

In northern Shaba province two large villages, Sandosa and Kapanga, remained in rebel hands despite a government drive in the area.

'Absolutely no progress' on SALT, officials say

WASHINGTON. — The U.S. government has made "absolutely no progress" toward breaking the deadlock with the Soviet Union over a new treaty to limit nuclear weapons, U.S. officials say.

This assessment comes after four weeks of intensive American efforts to reverse the Soviets' rejection of a proposal by President Carter to radically change the approach to a "Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty" (SALT).

The officials, who insisted that they not be quoted by name, said the U.S. has offered no major change in the two proposals turned down March 30 by Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev during talks with U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in Moscow.

Carter, Vance and National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski then tried to promote the rejected approach in subsequent meetings here with Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin.

In spite of optimistic statements from Carter and others, the officials say that no Soviet leaders have budged from their opposition.

The sources also played down the importance of Tuesday's announcement of the resumption of working-level talks in Geneva on implementing whatever SALT agreement is reached. Any claim that these talks, which start May 11, represent progress is "simply a charade," the officials said, adding that the delegations have no meaningful work to do until the U.S. and Soviet leaders break their impasse.

Three shot in Soweto demonstration

JOHANNESBURG (UPI). — Police fired at crowds of black students protesting against rent increases, wounding three, Brig. Jan Vlasser, police chief for the African suburb of Soweto said yesterday.

Vlasser said police used shotguns and teargas to break up a crowd of about 2,000 demonstrators who gathered around the Morris Isaacson High School in Soweto, 24 km. southwest of Johannesburg during the afternoon.

The demonstrators set fire to a beer hall in Soweto, home of more than a million South African blacks.

Riots in the sprawling township nearly a year ago were the start of a wave of race violence across South Africa that claimed some 500 lives.

Yesterday's troubles began over rent increases, announced last week, of between 40 to 10 per cent. In Cape Town, representatives of the five major Western powers yesterday began crucial talks with South African leaders on the future of troubled South West Africa (Namibia).

The U.S., Britain, France, West Germany and Canada are trying to persuade South Africa that its present plans for the independence of South West Africa would not be accepted by the international community.

They are arguing that free elections with the participation of the South West Africa Peoples Organization (SWAPO) should be held in the territory as part of the independence process. SWAPO is fighting a low-key guerrilla war for Black majority rule.

South African security forces killed 20 Black nationalist guerrillas and an Angolan soldier in South West Africa in the first 20 days of April, defence headquarters in Pretoria announced yesterday.

West Germany debating tougher anti-terror laws

By BRIAN ARTHUR
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

BONN. — West Germany, still shocked by the assassination earlier this month of Federal Prosecutor Siegfried Buback, is hotly debating the need for tougher laws to fight terrorism.

To Israelis, who have waged a virtual war against El Fatah and similar groups over the past years, the controversy on the Rhine may seem academic. But many Germans fear over-reaction would harm their country's first functioning democracy more than help it, while others believe democracy is now facing its acid test.

The Buback murder was perhaps the most cold-blooded in a series of terrorist incidents since the early 1970's, in which self-styled leftist revolutionaries have sought to disrupt the existing political structure.

The German terrorists appear to represent only a fringe of a few hundred activists, most of them born after World War II, plus a shadowy pool of several thousand sympathizers.

The most prominent of these hands, which are said to have extensive links to Arab terrorists in the Middle East, was the Baader-Meinhof gang. Its leaders, Andreas Baader and Ulrike Meinhof, went on trial on May 21, 1976 with two other members, Gudrun Ensslin and Jan Carl Raspe, charged with the bomb-murders of four persons and injury of at least 70 others.

Miss Meinhof was found hanged in her cell on May 9, 1976, an apparent suicide.

The accused sought to turn the court into a tribunal against society. After a turbulent series of procedural battles, hunger strikes by the defendants and a walkout by sympathizing lawyers, the trial is now drawing to a close. The verdict has been set tentatively for today.

Sporadic as it is, terrorism's existence in West Germany has sparked an uneasy discussion of what it means.

Some observers, such as Hamburg's respected former mayor Herbert Weichmann, suggest that West German democracy has reached a kind of saturation point. With their country now rich, powerful and socially stable, few West Germans have any complaints. The result, so the theory goes, is that critics tend to stress relatively minor social and political weaknesses, while glossing over democracy's traditional strengths.

Mr. Weichmann says Germans should become more combative in defending their strengths. Other leaders are more drastic. Historian Golo Mann (son of novelist Thomas Mann), shocked moderates recently when he recommended scrapping Bonn's liberal penal code when fighting extremists.

Mann wants the toughest kind of laws to deter urban guerrillas, and to ensure that they are locked up with stiff sentences with no chance of getting out on good behaviour. He went so far as to suggest that the time-honoured legal principle that "the accused is innocent until proved guilty" has no meaning when dealing with political bomb-throwers and the like.

The charged atmosphere following the Buback murder is reflected in growing bitterness between government and opposition in Bonn.

The Christian Democrats under their leader Helmut Kohl say the government has been alibi and lax in fighting terrorism, among other things permitting radical leftist teachers to preach anti-democratic values at schools and universities.

Mr. Kohl claims that the left-wing of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's Socialist Party is more afraid of the conservative right than it is of political gangsters.

The opposition is also demanding stiffer jail sentences for violent crimes, and above all the monitoring of conversations between captured terrorists and their lawyers, not allowed under present rules. Both government and opposition believe that come of the lawyers and terrorists are in cahoots with lawyers relaying communications between jailed ringleaders and their followers on the outside.

But the government is resisting major changes, partly because Mr. Schmidt's party genuinely fears that such changes could move Bonn towards a police state.

"We must resist the temptation to create a net of laws behind which freedom may one day disappear"

Baader crimes called acts of war

STUTTGART (Reuter). — Lawyers defending the three accused in the two-year Baader-Meinhof trial yesterday justified the crimes with which their clients are charged as legitimate acts of war by guerrillas helping the Vietnam Communists.

The four lawyers, who have hounded the trial for six weeks during which their clients have been on a hunger strike, made their final plea to more than 100 German and foreign reporters in front of a battery of television cameras in a hotel 10 kilometres from the special bomb-proof court in Stammheim Jail.

Andreas Baader, 33, Gudrun Ensslin, 36, and Jan-Carl Raspe, 32, are charged with murder, robbery and bombings in 1972, when three bombs were planted in U.S. Army headquarters in Heidelberg and Frankfurt, killing four soldiers. The verdict is due today.

Their lawyers yesterday said U.S. military activities in Vietnam had been "genocidal," on a par with the German liquidation of Jews during World War II, and compared the actions of their clients to a hypothetical bombing of Gestapo headquarters that helped save Jews from the gas chambers.

In Geneva yesterday, 10 parents and relatives of the accused in the two-year trial demonstrated at the United Nations' European headquarters here to demand that they be treated as prisoners of war.

Indian-Soviet ties assured in Gromyko visit

NEW DELHI (AP). — Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and his Indian counterpart yesterday signed three important economic agreements increasing Soviet assistance to India.

Gromyko and Indian External Affairs Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee signed the agreements at the conclusion of Gromyko's three-day official visit aimed at mending fences with India's new government.

The most important agreement extends to India a 20-year line of credit of 50 million rubles for development of Indian technical capability, particularly in the steel and coal industries.

Under a second agreement, Indo-Soviet trade this year will be expanded by nearly $17m., bringing the year's total trade turnover between the two countries to about $1.5 billion.

The increase this year is due in large measure to a Soviet decision to supply India with about one million tons of Soviet Crude oil over the next five years in exchange for Indian goods such as steel and pig iron.

A third agreement provides for the establishment of a sophisticated all-weather telecommunications link between the two countries at a cost of about $20 million.

Gromyko came to India following indications that the new government's relations with the Soviet Union might not be as warm as those of former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government.

India's new Prime Minister Morarji Desai had said on the day he took office that his government would follow a policy of "genuine nonalignment" without any "special relationships" the term Mrs. Gandhi often used to characterize Indo-Soviet ties.

But the day after Gromyko arrived he received spoken assurance from the new government that close Indo-Soviet relations would continue.

French strike in protest of gov't wage policy

PARIS (AP). — Electricity, railroad, local transport and postal services were disrupted in France from yesterday evening as strikers throughout the country protested the government's continued tough wages line.

The strikes, due to end tomorrow, build up to the traditional May 1 mass march in Paris and other cities. The disruptions were due to follow the usual strike pattern of blackouts of a couple of hours, as diminished energy supplies are rotated through different sectors.

Owen opens talks in Syria

DAMASCUS. — British Foreign Secretary David Owen yesterday opened talks with his Syrian counterpart amid official Syrian hopes for "substantial improvement" in relations.

Owen, on a Middle East tour, conferred with Syria's Deputy Premier and Foreign Minister, Abdul Halim Khaddam, following up talks the previous night with Premier Abdul Rahman Khleifawi. He also met with President Hafez Assad.

Khaddam expressed "his serious hopes that the talks will result in substantial improvement of bilateral relations between the United Kingdom and Syria," a spokesman reported.

The Syrian press headlined Owen's comment at a Tuesday evening banquet stressing that "a homeland for the Palestinians is one of the issues that must be discussed" in the search for Middle East peace.

'We lost the spark'

This month the Kibbutz Movement celebrated its 50th anniversary. YIGAL PE'ERI, of Hashavua, the weekly journal of the Hashomer Hatzar kibbutz movement, recently listened in to a conversation between three members of the Daniel family of Kibbutz Ma'abarot: Eliahu; his daughter Noa, and his son Shaul, 33.

ELIAHU: The kibbutz movement is far from its starting point, and even further from what we aspire to achieve. What I want to achieve is really unattainable. And I know in advance that I'm letting myself in for frustration and disappointment. But when you have a dream, when you aspire to something, you get the strength to dare to do things, to struggle, to go on seeking.

NOA: Dad, those are just big words without much to back them. Most of the kibbutz population today isn't doing much aspiring. We've become fat and contented. We've got it good. We've stopped trying. We don't have the spark.

So you and a few of your contemporaries want to fly. How many others are there in the kibbutz movement who've got the spark? When you've got it good, you're not bothered by anything and you stop dreaming.

SHAU: Dad's always using big words. Most people stay in the kibbutz because they've got it good here. No ideology about it. The quality of life of the kibbutzim is good. The people are first class. And you know that your life isn't going to run into any hitches at all.

NOA: Mature people always have to go on asking themselves why they're here. The minute we stop asking, we're in danger of losing our vitality. We'll drift into the doldrums, and we'll turn into a shell or a village of kulaks.

SHAU: I've got the feeling we've reached a crisis. For the last 10 or 15 years, the kibbutzim have been providing very well for their members' material needs. We're at the point where people are starting to ask themselves questions, and maybe even to look for things beyond the purely material. I think we're now closing a circle that's part of a cycle. I think people will start looking for that additional something once more. They'll go back to ideology, back to home study, to culture that isn't a television culture.

ELIAHU: Listen to him talk about going back to ideology.

SHAU: Dad, what do you mean by ideology?

ELIAHU: I like these young people. Anything but ideology, he says. But looking for meaning in life is all right. More ethical living is all right. Liberation from the communications media is all right. I guess the gap between us is a semantic one. I call water and Noa calls it H₂O. You're just as afraid of materialism as I am, and of consumer culture. In addition, the matter of terminology scares you. You're right, we've phrasified too much.

NOA: "Phrasified" — that's too easy a way out for people who were coining slogans all the time and didn't do much about implementing them.

ELIAHU: We had faith! Even if everything didn't materialize, we believed in something. We believed that it's possible to improve people and society.

NOA: But you weren't too good at seeing the difficulties.

ELIAHU: Right, we underestimated the difficulties. We were naive idealists. We set our sights too high, we set them on distant targets — but maybe that's what made it possible for us to achieve as much as we did.

SHAU: You wanted things to be good here, and we want things to be good. The difference is that you wanted to reform the whole world, and we don't. You joined the Brigade (the Jewish brigade in the British Army in World War II).

ELIAHU: Of course we joined the Brigade. But why did you volunteer for the Patrol (one of the Israel Defense Forces' crack fighting units)?

SHAU: That's something else.

ELIAHU: It isn't "something else." Maybe the difference between us lies in our respective "piety." The principles of justice on which the kibbutz movement is based have to apply beyond the kibbutz fence, too. If what prevails in Israel is exploitation, the social gap, status-seeking, bureaucracy, lack of human dignity — the kibbutz movement will also be affected, and its very existence may be endangered.

But something else bothers me. I talk with young people a lot, and sometimes I wonder why they don't regard manual labour as a way of self-fulfilment. A person taking a wild prairie and turning it into a methodically furrowed field — why isn't that self-fulfilment? Maybe this is a carry-over from the long Jewish experience in which they came to look down on manual labour. All Jewish mothers want their sons to be doctors or lawyers. Shaul produces fine ootons. But that's not self-fulfilment for him. His photography — that's self-fulfilment.

SHAU: That's not true, Dad. I understand those for whom manual labour is a value, and not just a matter of livelihood. I'm glad when I see people who enjoy manual labour and consider it a way of life. But in recent years that's become very hard to find in the kibbutzim, especially in the industrialized ones.

True, manual labour was once considered the same as composing poetry. Today it's an economic necessity. I have no absolute answer. Labour satisfies me, but it doesn't mean much to me in terms of self-fulfilment. It has more to do with economic aspirations, with wanting to be the best in the area, wanting the field to look pretty — and pretty as a result of work you enjoy doing. At the same time, I also want to dabble in photography.

ELIAHU: But with the young people, self-fulfilment always has to do with dabbling in some art or other, or with "doing my own thing," apart from the rest of society. When I was draining the swamps — I'm talking like a real old timer now — even though that was a national mission, it also provided a sense of self-fulfilment. A person who is kibbutz secretary today has a hard time of it, but he is using a great deal of his potential. Where else would he be dealing with such a wide and varied range of problems that would allow him to develop his full potential?

NOA: This should really be a festive conversation — 50th anniversary and all that — and instead of sitting here grumbling and arguing, we should be talking about the beautiful Spring, the pretty lawns, and how great we are. But that would be missing an opportunity, because after all the festive words, you've also got to do some stocktaking.

We're a very unspontaneous society. We've set up so many barriers. Kibbutz people are always worrying about their image. We're always baying to prove ourselves. That's all right, but on the other hand, you never see people having spontaneous outbursts of joy.

I've been teaching dancing quite a few years. And I've never seen my pupils let go unless there was some special reason. You just can't get any spontaneity out of them. And after all, they're just a reflection of us. And when everything is so controlled, you stop being sensitive to other people, and then you stop saying, "Hello. How are you?" People never say, "How are you?" here. There's no such thing as "How are you?" except when there's been some tragedy. People are afraid to expose themselves, to reveal themselves.

ELIAHU: We've become institutionalized. Anybody with any kind of problem has a fixed address to go to here. We've become so organized that we're in danger of atrophy. We wanted every problem to have its fixed address, but we've progressed too far in that respect, and we've lost our spontaneity.

NOA: We've lost the spark, the inspiration. The kibbutz way of life is becoming more and more materialistic. I don't believe a person can be a good kibbutz secretary if he has no inspiration in him.

SHAU: That "spark," that "inspiration," is very hard to define. Maybe it means rising above banality, always carrying a drop of vision in you. Actually, you can do just about anything if you've got that drop of vision.

But maybe this is all just words. I'm the kibbutz manager right now. Do you know how I've changed in the past year? I wish I had the strength not to be overwhelmed by the petty day-to-day struggles and to hold on to that drop of vision.

Untitled drawing with watercolour by David Schnuerer from his Haifa exhibition.

DAVID SCHNEUER. Competent drawings with watercolour, of broiled scenes probably influenced by Toulouse Lautrec — the old fashioned male bats and fully dressed women are a give-away. He is at his best in depicting single figures or pairs. Some 30 drawings of a partly dressed woman, although not in an entirely novel pose, are undoubtedly the premier item on show, as they are so carefully drawn and composed.

His couples are also very fair, for example 8. On the other hand, since his intention, by stating the ordinariness, is descriptive, the group compositions are more or less illustrative and less artistically striking. Number 39, as a lively highly coloured watercolour sketch, is an exception. ("Graphics 3" Gallery, Haifa).

S. BEN-ELIAHU. The more interesting items are the quasi-photographic watercolour and wash. From the black and white versions, preference to "Lone Tree," the usual Haifa by night, and three trees overlooking water; from the colour, the nocturne with a yellow sky.

The oils, landscapes, flowers etc. are ordinary and often spoiled by an over-all brown, as if for a patina effect; a bit better, the clouds of 44. (Ritz Gallery, Haifa). Till May 6.

CH. DEBARO and M. MITTELMARK. As at this Gallery's recent collective, Debaro's best is the abstraction, based on flowers, their wispy masses organized in space, e.g. "Autumn" and "Winter's End." Her usual realism consists of fantasy combinations of painting, dance and music ("Quintet"). It is delicate but, unlike colour, line does not always fit exactly. A new venture, sculpture, three realist pieces in plaster and one in clay, all with slightly cubist undertones, is quite competent.

Mittelmarm's drawings have much improved; however, his interwoven tree trunks and human figures overdo fantasy, and in only one instance, this does not interfere with composition ("Tras of Life 1"). The landscape oils are naturalistic. (Hagafen Gallery, Haifa). Till May 4.

A. SOFFER-SCHNEUER. Her wood sculpture is outstandingly well-turned and forms the most important factor in determining her style; take "The Show-Off" (a female figure) where technique gets the exact cut separating head from body, the minimal relief for articulating the scalp and the swing of a robe half around the body. In fact, realism underlies much of what might be considered abstraction, e.g., "Anacda," despite its columnar spiral, and "Conflict," undulating, serpentine coils pierced by a through void. One very attractive piece is "Alarm," a strange figure with a huge box of an eye at the rear of the profile and the equilibrium of sharp and rounded contours typifying all her work. One would also rate "Hassid," with its towering dignity, very highly, were it not for a too narrow frontal view, surely a slip in 3-D. (Chagall House, Haifa). Till May 4.

JEAN DAVID. Acrylics and drawings. The former, representing national and figurative, are expressed variations of a customary bird iconography in the backgrounds. The female is portrayed either as she is or in the guise of a white dove, the male as a cock or a body. Nevertheless, no tasteless idealism, no approach that identification is not always certain. One example, not in the "bird" series, is the spiritual connection between the depiction of a man and that of a bride, both wearing similar headgear and dark dresses, the only difference being that one of them holds a flower.

The pencil drawings, deservedly in a room by themselves, are admirably sited in space. The "bird" theme is often clearer than in the acrylics. At the same time we have two natural birds as if from life, a second rather fanciful pair looking realistic and, among others, two nudes, a hand, and heads, sculpture in their modelling of light and shade. (Goldman's Gallery, Haifa). Till mid-May.

An invitation from university women

A WOMAN from abroad will for the first time this year be invited to pursue graduate studies in Israel on a scholarship of the Israel Association of University Women. "Israel's give, not only take," was the way Association President Shira Gaulan explained the new move.

Since 1932 the association, has been providing moral and/or financial support to Israeli women furthering their education and has administered scholarships received from chapters of university women in other countries.

To help finance its scholarships it is sponsoring one performance of the Compagnie Philippe Genty, the French puppet theatre, in conjunction with the Spring Festival at the Jerusalem Theatre on May 1.

International relations is an important part of IAUW activities, according to Dr. Gaulan. Israel participates in conferences once every three years, attended by representatives of some 300 university graduates in nearly 60 countries. Many of the women have influential positions in their own country, and Gaulan considers the meetings a good opportunity to explain Israel's policies and describe life here.

Direct relations with women from Arab countries have been minimal, and by some reports have consisted of Israeli representatives picking up the political pamphlets Arab women put down on all the seats in the conference room.

Domestic activities include the grants, which are designed to encourage a woman to continue studies just at the point where it becomes difficult because of family or work obligations. Only graduate fellowships are available. This year, for instance, the Jerusalem branch (one of six in the country) is giving four grants. On a fifty-fifty basis with the Hebrew University, they cover one year's tuition.

The Tel Aviv branch helps finance "encouragement prizes" to immigrant women for excellence in Hebrew studies. This year's two grants of IL750 are going to a musicologist and an engineer, both from Russia.

Within the branches (the four major cities, plus Rehovot and Herzliya-Kfar Shmaryahu) women meet to discuss topics ranging from HAIFA has been grievously wronged. The wrong-doers, of all people, were the select group of men on the Labour Party's otzma messaderet, the committee for political appointments (a more accurate translation would be "fixing committee"). It is set up before the elections to pick out, from among hundreds of claimants, those it deems fit to be included in the Alignment list of Knesset candidates, and in what order.

In the past, the committee's work was easier. It fixed the entire list amid the jolly-burly of pressures and counter-pressures for safe seats from various groups. The rank-and-file members had little direct influence on this highly sensitive operation. The current mood is for "more democracy within the parties." The electorate's esteem of the "fixing committees" has slumped. Regard for a more democratic procedure in preparing the list of candidates has risen. It is part of an undefined demand for change.

In the Labour Party, the struggle for such change is not yet very fierce. There is a wish for change, but not for too much, like the wish of St. Augustine who, after a turbulent youth, prayed: "Oh Lord, make us chaste, but not yet." The district branches of the party demanded a 50 per cent share of the seats for their democratically elected candidates, leaving 40 per cent for the appointment committee. They settled for much less.

Of all the Labour Party branches, that of Greater Haifa (including the bay-side town) is the strongest in membership though it is not the most populous area. That strength is a heritage of a local fixer of stature, the late Abba Khoushy. Its half-million population accounts for 13 per cent of the nation's total 3.8m.

Mapai in the past, the Labour Party later, the Alignment now, has always done well at the polls in the Haifa district. Its branch leaders and voters were well entitled to claim for their candidates at least 13 per cent of the safe seats, four or five among the first 40. The branch leaders — wondrous modesty — were satisfied with three. The chances looked good for such sweet reasonableness and restraint.

In the coalition that followed the resignation of Prime Minister Rabin, the appointment committee, unprepared for a shock wave of sudden pressure, forgot — or chose to forget? — that the party's grassroots grew thickest in Haifa and accorded the district one seat.

Spin off of fury

VIEW FROM THE NORTH / Ya'acov Ardon

In the crudest sense of the word, the committee fixed Haifa. The surprise and dismay at party headquarters in Hadar Hacarmel are hard to imagine. Whatever their political, moral and intellectual calibre, the district officials and their faithfuls, a hard-working lot, felt humiliated and deprived. And well they might.

Their spontaneous, unreflected reaction, in true Haifa style, was to go on strike and to stop drumming up popular support for the Alignment list. This the leaders in Tel Aviv and in Jerusalem regarded as worse than the seamen's strike. They did not do for the merebent marine: a top-level team of leaders (party secretary Zarmi, Ministers Peres, Allon and Bar-Lev) rushed to Haifa to appease and lure the sulkers out of their tent.

With smooth tongue and breast bared in contrition, Peres admitted that Haifa had been wronged. While the Knesset list cannot be revised, the party clearly owed the Haifa branch compensation, he said. And promised it. From their conductor the Haifa second string instrumentalists accepted the plea of guilt, forgave the wrong and went back to their scores.

CLOSER examination of this incident opens a view into the past that suggests a long process of mutual alienation between branch and centre. Could it be that the disregard of Haifa was not simply the result of a sudden confusion among the appointment committee (read: top leaders) precipitated by Rabin's resignation? A long and searching look into the past brings to mind how the men of the Mapai-Labour-Alignment branch (hereinafter simply "Haifa") discoloured the political and economic fabric of the whole country through their centrifugal energies. The process deserves to be recorded at length by a historian.

Labour Council leader Abba Khoushy's personal feud with the Hagana commanders up to 1948 is a matter of record. Oddly enough, the first major strike in the state was an act of defiance against the Labour Council. At the end of 1951, the seamen, officers and ratings united, wanted to secede from it and from the Histadrut altogether and to set up their own independent trade union. The Council, led by secretary Yosef Almog and backed by Mayor Khoushy, crushed the strike with vigour. Police and "volunteer" seamen were brought to the ships, few in number then, and the supremacy of the Histadrut was upheld.

Soon after that the Council backed a strike against the Ata Textile Works over the issue of inefficiency dismissals. Ata was not defeated, but redundancy or inefficiency were never again a cause of discharge at any enterprise anywhere. Industrial productivity was held back by shop committees, with Labour Council backing, Labour's own industries in Haifa became models of low productivity. Labour men in economic key posts held back and hindered private enterprise at every turn.

Hillel Dan described the admission of the privately-owned Dagon Silo Company into the port as "a mistake." The then port manager made its operations difficult. Mayor Khoushy, like a Chinese warlord, ran a parochial political warren of his own. Council secretary Almog made headlines by saying that by a telephone call to the port (then the only one) he could force the country to its knees, or words to that effect.

Shop and staff committees were nurtured to defiance. The most famous example has been the Electric Corporation staff council, which claimed and asserted the right to decide which general manager was or was not acceptable, long before Yehoshua Peretz closed the gate of Ashdod Port, and before housewife Moshe Levy and ship's engineer Adam Chink alternated in paralyzing the merchant marine.

Its 50 strikes in the past four years did not start suddenly in 1973. Much of the early history of industrial relations was made in Haifa.

The centrifugal forces were strong and effective. The local leaders — of whom Abba Khoushy was a prototype whose spirit and example, if not his particular style, were followed through the Labour Council into the shop committees — were pugnacious, assertive men, hungry for power on the local scene, uninhibited by genuine needs like labour productivity and discipline, exports, foreign investments. To them these needs were the faraway concerns of central government, like security, good relations with the U.S., or fiscal policy, not part of the immediate local realities and not their responsibility.

This outlook has spread to Ashdod Port, to Lod Airport, to El Al, etc. It has helped to create an economic and social climate in which "anything goes." It has survived the death of Abba Khoushy, and the disappearance of Yehoshua Peretz. Haifa has not accomplished this alone. It could not have without the laissez-faire resignation and passivity in Jerusalem. Perhaps no single Ministry has contributed so much to this deterioration of labour relations and all that goes with it as that of Transport.

The current strike of the seamen is typical of all the 40 that preceded it in the past four years. The Transport Minister practically hid his hands, some head under the pillow whenever strikes hit the merchant marine, the ports, air and bus services. No counterforce from the centre. Only a soft core of retreats into TV appearances, passive submission and hopes for reason to prevail. Even hurricanes pass and spend their fury. But they leave behind hundreds of millions of damage. For the nation to pick up the bill.

Not that the Haifa men are not occasionally capable of generous gestures to serve the nation. They ceded their mayor to the Jewish Agency, where Mr. Rabin needed him. They allowed a deputy mayor from Tel Aviv to head the Electric Corporation. And, of late, the party's district and Labour Council leaders have been more aligned than others. Yet just now, far too late, by a quirk of history and suddenly the centre hit back, some 10, 20 years too late. It is as if in a ship, the men on the bridge and in the engine rooms had different ideas of how to run it, ignoring the passengers who own it.

Samaritan memories

The Samaritans celebrate their Passover next Sunday, and the editor of their fortnightly magazine, BENYAMIN TSEDAKA, talks to SRAJA SHAPIRO about the indelible traces in and around Nablus of this ancient community.

FOR BENYAMIN (written with a final M, not the N of the Judeans) Tsedaka, editor of the Samaritan fortnightly "Alaf Beith," the hills around Nablus are full of Samaritan memories. "I visit these villages and see people who are clearly Samaritans. No mistake about their identity. They are different from their neighbours, who must be the descendants of comparatively recent immigrants."

"Kadumi? Of course he's a Samaritan. Or rather, of Samaritan descent. In Kadumi, which is the village he hails from, the leading family is named Sufan — easily identified as the Hebrew Tsafnat. They were a noted Samaritan family, until they converted to Islam."

Generally, Benyamin notes, the newcomers treat the former Samaritans somewhat haughtily, though, according to the Koran, the faithful must hold the neophytes in high respect. Nevertheless, the tiny surviving Samaritan community here does not expect any of their former co-religionists to return to their midst. "Once out, always out."

Generally, the Samaritans maintain good relations with those who "opted out." The family of Ish, in Nablus, has the Samaritans' trust. The name indicates their origin: it means "to live," a translation of the Hebrew "Y'h" related to Yitha or Ha'im. The original name was "Mitu'haya," the Aramaic for "life."

In some cases, the conversion took place in the not so distant past. Tsedaka notes. The Muslimans of Nablus, have been Moslems since 1820. The Habibe family converted even later in the century. The lineage cannot be accurately traced in many cases, but Dar Taher is obviously a corruption of Tahor (that is, pure), a Samaritan name. El Matri, the Jordan Government's spokesman, is a native of Ramle, where the descendants of a family linked to King Saul took refuge in the 17th century after a pogrom which wiped out Samaritan communities in Damascus, Jaffa and Gaza.

The martyrdom of the Samaritans began long before the Arabs came. The Samaritan rebellion against the Byzantines dragged on for generations in the fifth and sixth centuries. Sometimes the revolts were successful: two Samaritan kings ruled in Nablus. But there were also Samaritan mercenaries in Rome's legions, who must have taken part in the bloody repressions of Samaritan independence.

Samaritans on their holy mountain, Mt. Gerizim. (Israel Sun)

The Samaritans welcomed the Arabs as liberators. A Samaritan chronicle tells of a mission that was sent to Mohammed to ask for his intervention. It was only later that they learned from bitter experience that the Mohammedans practised forcible conversion. There was no way to keeping up an appearance of conversion while retaining the traditions of the clan, as the Jewish Marranos did in Spain, because the Moslems took the children from their parents' homes to train them as soldiers under the Moslem teachers.

There were 800,000 Samaritans in Palestine at the Arab conquest. But by the time of the British entry into Nablus, all the Samaritans left occupied only a small quarter of the town.

Around Nablus and Mount Gerizim, many villages still retain old Samaritan names. Awarta, for instance, is the old Avurta, a name which was revived elsewhere on the map by Kibbutz Ma'abarot, Tsedaka says. It is the burial place of the great priests of the Bible, Elazar, Itamar and Pinhas.

Kufir Askar, according to Tsedaka, is the successor of Eln Sokher, which was populated by Samaritans until the 15th century. Akaba is an ancient Samaritan priestly site. Beit Wasan was Beit Zayin of the Samaritans. And Jenin, of course, Eln Ganim, where, Josephus relates, Samaritans killed a delegation of Galilee Jews on its way to Jerusalem.

In his publication, Tsedaka devotes much space to retracing the genealogy of lost families. He has counted over 100. Each family was, in fact, a tribe. Today, some 600 Samaritans maintain the traditions. But Tsedaka is not dismayed. Samaritans, he says, are stubborn people.

PET'S CORNER / Israela Even Chen

WHAT type of dog makes the best pet in a city apartment?

A great deal depends on the type of owner. The most popular dog in Israel, by far, is the German Shepherd (Alsatian) or Zeev as he is popularly known. This breed is one of the seven classified as Working Dogs, Group A in the Federation Cynologique Internationale. Some of the others are the Doberman, the Boxer, and the Schnauzer.

These are medium-sized breeds, with strong protective instincts, who tend to be very loyal to their owners. Due to their size, they require exercise; being of strong character, they require owners with tact.

Any one of these breeds are good house pets if properly cared for and trained. They are naturally intelligent, can be as gentle with children as a lamb and more protective of their owners and property than any paid guard.

A dog of this size requires at least an hour of exercise daily. This can be split into separate time periods if you live near a large park, he can be allowed to run and play all at once. These exercise periods are of course, distinctly separate from his walks to relieve himself. They can be combined, but a quick walk to care for his physical needs must never be considered as part of his exercise period.

A dog who has the size and temperament of a working animal must be trained. If the training is begun young, it is fun for both of you, not an onerous chore. If left till too late an age, you will probably require professional assistance. This will entail both a large cash outlay and a great deal more hard work for you and your dog.

The heavier-coated breeds of this group, such as the Standard Schnauzer, and the German Shepherd are quite capable of living out doors if provided with a well built, dry, dog house. They actually prefer to be outside in what we consider inclement weather. The shorter-coated breeds, such as the Doberman and the Boxer, suffer seriously from both extreme heat and severe cold. They should not be kept unless you are prepared to have the dog in the house with you. The Boxer, especially, with his short nose, cannot withstand the dry heat of a sharov.

Both types of coats require only minimal grooming and upkeep. With the heavier coats, there is a bit more shedding, but this can be easily kept under control with sufficient brushing. Only the Standard Schnauzer, with his wire-hair, needs professional grooming to look well and have a healthy coat. Many owners learn to groom even their standard Schnauzers by themselves. It is not difficult, if done regularly. Some of these breeds, such as the Doberman and the Boxer, usually have their ears cut at about 10 weeks old, in order to make them stand up. The operation can only be performed by a qualified veterinarian. This extra expense should be taken into consideration when deciding on the type of pet that you want.

If absolute loyalty and natural intelligence are what you are looking for, one of these working breeds can be the optimal dog for you.

MUSIC REVIEWS

THE SYDNEY STRING QUARTET. Peter Sculthorpe: Quartet No. 3; Janacek: Quartet No. 1; Beethoven: Quartet in F Major Op. 15, No. 1 (Moshev Nishpan, April 18).

UNFORTUNATELY we know little about musical activity in Australia and even less about its composers. To meet by the Sydney String Quartet, in a pleasant and informal atmosphere at the residence of the Australian Embassy's Trade Commissioner at Moshav Rishpon, was a welcome opportunity to learn about the music of Australia and its performing bodies.

The programme, including an Australian composition and Janacek's Quartet No. 1, a magnificent piece of music unjustifiably neglected by our own ensembles, was a pleasant and refreshing surprise.

Peter Sculthorpe's quartet undoubtedly possesses features derived from ethnic tribal music and seems inspired by Australia's immense open spaces. Rhythmic ostinati, continuous central tones, modality and percussive elements endow the piece with regional colour. But the most interesting item of the evening was the Janacek quartet. It was outstanding, both for its intrinsic musical value and for its performance. The quartet played the piece with great dedication and complete involvement. What particularly impressed was the way in which all the sections of Janacek's piece amalgamated into a lovely wholeness.

To sum up the Beethoven, the performance was adroitly organized and well-played, but not musically absorbing. The first and second movements were slightly undisciplined and too restrained.

BENJAMIN BAR-AM

"LAULON YSTAEVAE." Male Voice Choir from Turku, Finland, conducted by Esko Salasari (YMCA Auditorium, Jerusalem, April 28). Settings by Finnish composers and songs by E. Ben-Haim, M. Shalem, N. Shemer.

LACK of advance publicity and adverse weather conditions kept many lovers of choir singers away from this event, and the loss is theirs. The Men's Choir from Turku (a small town some 100 miles north-west of Helsinki) treated us to a programme of Finnish music, completely unknown to our stages. The music is all rather restrained in emotion, minor in key, sad, serene or subdued in character. But the singing is beautifully controlled and reflects generations of choir culture tradition.

Baritone Erkki Luctonen contributed two solo songs with pleasant voice, and Esa Nordgren accompanied and added some piano work by Sibelius to the programme.

As a tribute to Israel, two songs — "Kalanit" by E. Ben-Haim and "Shiboleit Ba'sade" by M. Shalem — were rendered in the conductor's apt arrangement.

The programme started with the two national anthems and closed with the two "unofficial" anthems as encores: Naomi Shemer's "Jerusalem of Gold" and Jean Sibelius' "Finlandia," symbolising the friendly cultural relations between our two countries.

Selective downtrend

AVIV. — The downtrend, which continued on Tuesday, was particularly evident in the financial sector, especially among the shares of the major banks. The market atmosphere appeared to improve noticeably.

Financials continued to reflect a switching of funds to that sector. In the minds of investors the financial issues offer a strong defensive position, since management of the major banks give market support to their own issues.

Discount "A" shares continued to gain as they added 15 points to an even 600. Bank Leumi, leading the most active issues, listed with a turnover of more than 100,000, added a half point to 200. Other issues advanced slightly.

Mortgage bank issues were mixed. Tefahot was a loser as it gave up 16 points to 382. Canel gained 10 to 386. Other issues advanced unchanged or slightly lower.

Insurance stocks were all better. Arvel gained 10 to 395 as did Sahar to 386. Haasneh added two higher to 400, while Taur Registered advanced 20 to 400.

Delek shares were sharply lower on a 32-point loss to 625. Jordan Exploration shares were 200 better at 1,850, but the warrants declined by 250 to 3,650. Naphta was "sellers only" and fixed at 2,042, while Lapidot was 100 lower at 1,800.

Israel Cold Storage ILA shares continued to rise without any trading. They were upped to 2,085 after a "buyers only" situation. The ILA shares were dropping for a 34-point loss to 640. Israel Electric Corp. was lower at 680. Lighterage was "sellers only" at 54.

Land development and real estate issues were mixed. There were however, some good movers in the list. Mehadim gained 25 to 640. Pri Or had the largest gain of the day as the shares soared by 70 to 650. Africa-Israel ILA shares were 10 lower at 609. ILDC options were 16 lower at 250.

The Industrials were hard hit by profit-taking. The "sellers only" sign was prevalent throughout the list. The shares of the late industrial Electra options, Argaman preferred and common, Phoenixia ILA, Elite Adventures, and Ata debentures, The Ata shares, which recently have been on the rise, were dropped for a 15-point loss to 180. Electra ILA gave up 22.5 to 402. Dubek was 34 lower at 600.

Investment company shares spent a trying session. Paz Investments was 30 lower at 630. Wolfson ILA0 eased by seven and a half to 182. The investment companies of the major banks were all lower. Elern was 14 down to 420. Mizrahi Investments eased by five to 275. Amisara was "sellers only" and marked down to 1835. Koor Investments was a lone major winner. This shares were "buyers only" in the opening round and marked up to 1,390. They rose another 70 points in the variables to close out at 1,360. The overall gain was 185 points. Pilyon was 10 lower at 670.

The index-linked bond market continued to trade indecisively, with prices showing little change. Trading volume picked up a bit to over 100m.

The Natad investment dollar extended its losing ways for the second session in a row. An offer of somewhat less than $400,000 pushed the price down by six agorot to ILA1.91.

The General Index of Share Prices fell by 0.15 per cent to 130.58.

Supervision of driving schools is too lax

By JEROME MEYER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The supervision of driving schools is insufficient and lax, the State Comptroller says. There is no checking of the teaching process or of the quality of the cars used in training.

Nor is the supervision that does take place continuous. Transport Ministry inspectors visit a school when it first applies for a license, and then once a year, at the annual license renewal time in April.

The supervision of driving schools is part of the duties of the Driving and Vehicles Service in the Licensing Department. There are 349 driving schools in the country, which use a total of 1,854 specially adapted and licensed cars and trucks in their work.

The 36 schools in Jerusalem employ 244 vehicles and are supervised by one inspector. Tel Aviv has the largest number of schools, 204, with 1,053 cars. There are only two inspectors in Tel Aviv.

Haifa has 100 schools with 470 cars

Parts dealers make excessive profits, Knesset committee charges

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

Drivers endanger their own lives and the lives of others, because vehicle spares are so expensive that the drivers simply fail to carry out repairs.

The Knesset Economic Committee, making this statement in the course of its recommendations on the problem of expensive car spares, placed the onus for the situation mainly on the Ministry of Transport.

The committee said bluntly that the Transport Ministry allows the spare parts dealers to make excessive profits.

The Ministry, it said, should carry out proper inspection to make sure that when taxes on spares are reduced, the importers and the garage owners do not pocket the difference.

Traffic observers may appear as witnesses against offenders

NAHARIYA. — Volunteer traffic observers in the Galilee are stepping up their campaign against traffic offenders.

In the past they used to send warning letters to motorists they observed breaking a traffic law. Now their report is forwarded to the police, who summon the driver for an interview, during which he also receives a stern warning. If the driver does not admit his fault and does not indicate that he is ready to drive more carefully in future, the police may "turn around and lay a charge against him."

The traffic observer who wrote the report will then be asked to appear as a witness in court.

This is a radical departure from previous practice. In the past the observers, organized by the National Council for the Prevention of Accidents, restricted themselves to sending out repeated warning letters — relying on their educative and exhortatory value. The observer corps was not thought of as in any way an auxiliary to the police.

The new, tougher approach, may eventually be extended to other parts of the country.

The Western Galilee branch of the National Council for the Prevention of Accidents, headed by Max Steinmetz of Nahariya, has been active for 25 years. Its budget for this year is IL50,000 and its activities extend to all kibbutzim and settlements in the area, including Arab and Druse localities. These activities include safety courses in schools, preventive driving courses and organizing traffic observers. (Iim)

VW pays 10% dividend as profits up

WOLFSBURG, West Germany (AP). — The Volkswagen factory, two years ago on the brink of financial collapse, recently announced it has recovered all losses and will suggest paying a 10 per cent dividend to shareholders.

The West German auto giant said after a meeting of its supervisory board that the company closed the 1976 financial year with a $327m. profit. By 1974, Volkswagen had accumulated a record $365m. in losses.

It was the first time in two years that Volkswagen, since February 1975 under management of former Ford employee Toni Schmuecker, announced a dividend payment.

Israel-Germany trucking agreement

An agreement providing for mutual trucking rights between Israel and West Germany was initiated in Jerusalem yesterday.

Ehud Gera, deputy-director general of the Transport Ministry signed on behalf of Israel and Hermann Neuhäusser signed for the German Transport Department.

The agreement allows trucks and trailers of either country to move freely on the roads of the other. Traffic will be routed through Italian ports.

The agreement goes into force on June 1.

THE MINI'S BACK AGAIN

THE MINI'S NEW VERSION

reasons for Ben-Gurion's decision and the establishment of Rafi, which adopted the reform as a major plank in its platform.

It was not until the return of a meeting of Rafi to the fold and the establishment of the United Israel Labor Party (Avodah) in January 1968, that further progress was made.

Nine years later, the Joseph committee's proposals have become the basis for the present bill, which provides for 10 five-member constituencies, with 40 members to be elected by nationwide lists. Thus, Labour has agreed, in order to ensure a proportional representation of the various religious and ethnic groups in the country, to increase the number of members of the Knesset from 120 to 140.

THE MINI FASHION

Impossible to divide up the country into constituencies. If elections were to be held, there would be no realistic alternative to the proportional representation system, with voting for party lists and the entire territory under Israeli control as a single constituency.

For this reason the committee recommended this method as a temporary, one-time expedient, and it was expected that the Constituent Assembly (later renamed the First Knesset) would enact a more satisfactory permanent system.

The holding of elections at all in such circumstances was a remarkable achievement. Twenty years ago, when the country was only one large constituency, there were only one large constituency, with 40 members to be elected by nationwide lists. Thus, Labour has agreed, in order to ensure a proportional representation of the various religious and ethnic groups in the country, to increase the number of members of the Knesset from 120 to 140.

Lahat's bubble

THERE IS ROOM for widely differing opinions about the wisdom of spending the sum of eleven million pounds — in current prices — on the grandiose face-lifting project for Tel Aviv's renowned Dizengoff Circle.

Mayor Shlomo Lahat for one believes that, in its pristine design, the Circle has become an intolerable impediment to the flow of traffic. Therefore, it must be razed — or, more precisely, transmogrified into a double-decker urban wonder that would be fit for both cars and pedestrians. This would take time, and cost money. But the final result, the mayor has assured city residents, would be perfectly fabulous.

The argument has not struck everyone as absolutely convincing. The Post's own Helga Dudman reported a full four months ago that, in a poll she had conducted among fellow Tel Avivians, she "didn't find one who didn't favour letting well enough alone, and who couldn't point to more urgent needs."

By that time the Circle was already under active destruction — or, as Mayor Lahat would have it, reconstruction. The old fountain had been dismantled, the first trees uprooted, and the entire Circle fenced off from man and beast. Soon after, the television cameras recorded, for the delectation of the national audience, the pouring of a huge bubble of reinforced concrete over the old city landmark.

Only one group of men was apparently not watching — the very group of high officials of the Interior Ministry in whose hands lay the fate of Dizengoff Circle. They had received the required budget proposal for the project from Mayor Lahat ahead of time — some six months ago. They did not give it their approval. But neither did they notify the mayor of their disapproval, and order stoppage of work.

Now, suddenly, the ministry's director general, Haim Kuberaky has woken up to discover that all this work has been going on illegally all this time, and must be halted at once. The result has been some confusion, and it is no wonder perhaps that Kuberaky's district representative, David Reanik, should have supplied the Tel Aviv municipality with two wholly contradictory orders on the subject the same day last week.

Hopping mad, Mayor Lahat has reacted with some indecorous language which is not fitting a man in his position. But the mayor is right on principle.

The root cause of the problem, claims the mayor, lies in the "endless bureaucratic delays by the ministry." The State Comptroller fully upholds the mayor on this point in his latest report.

But Mayor Lahat may also have a special problem, which lies in the fact that the Interior Ministry has just recently become the preserve, however temporary, of the Labour Party. The mayor, although something of a maverick, happens to represent the Likud. The municipal elections are not far off, and Labour would field a rival to Lahat for the post.

The mayor's chances would presumably be hurt if he were left on election day with a huge unfinished project smack in the busiest part of town.

And then, again, it is not inconceivable that Tel Avivians might take it out on the nominee of the party who sought to exploit such a mess.

Out of line

THE PUBLIC has for some time been aware that the business of government has virtually been handed over to the upper echelons of the civil service. To some extent this is perhaps unavoidable in the transition period between the resignation of a government and new elections.

This, however, does not mean that senior civil servants, whose responsibility these days seems to go far beyond the limits of merely implementing a policy decided by their ministers, have acquired the right to make public pronouncements on policy itself. The forecasts of the Budget Director, Sar-Shalom Shihran, that the budget will have to be cut by IL5 billion after the elections, and his publicly made recommendations to reorganize the Government into twelve ministries, are an example of such unwarranted interference in policy-making, even though he emphasized that he was expressing a personal opinion.

Whether one agrees with Shihran on the substance of what he said or not is irrelevant. The point is that decisions of the kind he mentioned are not technicalities within the province of his office — they are matters of major policy, and thus the prerogative of the Government and the Knesset.

The influence of the senior civil service on policy-making, especially in the Treasury, by virtue of their monopoly on information and their executive powers is already overwhelming. Certainly it shouldn't go still further.

For book lovers

IT IS REPORTED that, when President Jimmy Carter was a mere Governor of Georgia visiting Israel, the aspect of the country that amazed him most was the sight of long queues waiting with atypical patience to enter, not a sports arena, but a book fair.

Certainly the avid interest taken by Israelis in the proud display of publishers in Binyanei Ha'Ooma proves that we are not only the People of the Book, but people who love books. Milton described a good book as the precious life-blood of a master spirit; despite the lures of television and radio, Israelis continue to revere thoughts enshrined in print.

The crowds that are packing Binyanei Ha'Ooma are concerned with the "book" part of the Book Fair, but the 1,028 exhibitors are here also for the "fair" aspect. They come to buy and sell, to look for new products and markets: an enormous part of the fair is conducted in the corridors and tea-room of Binyanei Ha'Ooma or in the lounges of the packed hotels of Jerusalem.

Both publishing and printing have reached high standards in this country. It is to be hoped that the 850 publishing firms represented here will be not only sellers of titles, but also buyers of Israeli products; a very fruitful avenue recently being explored is that of co-productions by Israeli and foreign firms.

So too with printing. Modern means of rapid communication make the printing or part-printing of books in Israel economically feasible. It is highly desirable that our love of books should be combined with our love of exports.

Prospects for normal relations

EDITH B. FRANKEL examines the resumption of normal diplomatic relations between the State of Israel and the USSR, which might be involved in any

ALTHOUGH JERUSALEM has not been officially informed of any such intention on the part of the Kremlin, there are indications that the Soviet Union may at long last be moving in the direction of resuming diplomatic relations with the State of Israel. (Which in the nature of things, would lead to the normalization of relations with the rest of the Soviet bloc as well.)

There have, of course, been rumours to that effect for years. But never before has a high-level Soviet representative served notice of such a plan by his Government. This, however, is precisely what happened, according to PLO sources, at a recent meeting between Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and Yasser Arafat. The meeting was private, but Gromyko must have known that its contents would be leaked out in no time.

All this does not imply that the normalization of relations between the two countries soon is a certainty. But it does call for an examination of the elements of policy which might go into the making of any new normalcy.

FIRST, HOWEVER, it is well to define the meaning of "normal relations" in the Israel-Soviet context. Technically, the term means, at the very least, an exchange of official representatives who would carry out diplomatic functions. Beyond this bare minimum, Israeli-Soviet relations were ever rarely "normal."

The early years of diplomatic ties, which began in May 1948, were marked by a warmth which was gradually to disappear after the Soviet Union reappraised its own ties with Israel and sought other allies in the area. But despite a growing coldness towards Israel, as well as an internal policy characterized by overt anti-Semitism, the Soviets, for their own reasons, occasionally sided with Israel on a number of issues at the United Nations in 1950 and 1951. (The USSR withdrew its support of the internationalization of Jerusalem in April, 1950, for example, and by its abstention, allowed the passage of the Security Council Resolution requiring Egypt to open the Suez Canal to Israeli shipping in September 1951.)

The explosion in the Soviet legation in Tel Aviv on February 9, 1953 was cited by the Kremlin as the main reason for severing diplomatic relations at a time when they had, anyway, reached a nadir. But with the rise of the new, post-Stalin Soviet leadership, and the beginning of the Russian "thaw," ties were resumed the following July. In June 1954 the legations of the two countries were raised to embassy level, and the Soviet ambassador performed the singular act of presenting his credentials in Jerusalem. (The Soviet Union was thus only the third country to choose the capital over Tel Aviv for the ceremony.)

The ambivalence of Soviet policy was, however, rapidly eliminated, following the Czech arms deal with Egypt in 1955 which marked the pro-Arab turning point. Although relations were not broken after the Suez campaign, the Soviet Union did recall its ambassador for five months, as well as cancel its trade agreement with Israel.

Following this, relations between the two countries settled down to what has been described as a "qualified hostility" — a hostility punctuated from time to time by vague but impermanent improvements. Russian encouragement of Arab anti-Israel aspirations laid the groundwork for Nasser's precipitate actions of May, 1967. On June 10, 1967, just as the Six Day War drew to a close the Soviet Union — followed by the rest of the Eastern bloc with the sole exception of Rumania — broke off relations with Israel and thus the situation has remained for the past ten years.

IT IS REASONABLE to assume that the resumption of diplomatic ties would redound to the benefit of both countries. But the calculus of interests is not so simple or clear-cut.

The most obvious gain for Israel would be to reinforce its legitimacy in the international arena, and to undercut the position of many Third World countries, which insist that they cannot restore relations with Israel before an Arab-style settlement is finally arranged. This, of course, is the reason for the vehement Arab opposition to any such Soviet move. But in practical terms the advantages of having a Soviet Embassy in Tel Aviv would largely depend on Moscow's rationale in taking the decision.

Basically, there are two possible directions of Soviet thinking. On the one hand, Moscow may be eager to thrust itself into an active role in negotiations in order to sabotage the peace-making process, or at least to force a more pro-Arab settlement than the one that would be attained by U.S. diplomatic efforts. Such Soviet involvement could include pressure on Israel through direct diplomatic channels (which have their precedent, for example, in the threatening notes sent to Israel by Premier Bulganin in November 1956), as well as attempts, veiled by the screen of friendly mediation, to drive a wedge between Israel and the U.S. In this way the USSR could hope to regain some of the goodwill lost in recent years in Egypt and Syria.

On the other hand, at least on a short-term basis, Moscow may be anxious to involve itself in Middle East negotiations for a rather different reason. There is no question that the U.S., through its ability to talk to all sides, has gained a virtual monopoly as arbitrator. The Soviets may be eager to share the role of "honest broker," increasing their own relative importance in the area.

Furthermore, it is possible that Moscow has by now concluded that stability in the Middle East will serve its immediate purposes more than instability. The past Soviet strategy of supporting aggressive and destructive policies has manifestly not been rewarded by lasting commitments from the Arab "confrontation states." Also, assuming, as many observers do, that the main Soviet strategic goal in its Middle East policy has been the acquisition of firm footholds in the Mediterranean, the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf — to counter U.S. naval power — then that aim has been fulfilled with the cementing of relations with Libya, Somalia, Yemen and Iraq.

Moscow can thus maintain its military presence in the area and still share in the kudos involved in peace diplomacy. The current Soviet interest in the penetration of Africa could contribute to a desire for a pacification of the Middle East. With a change of circumstances, of course, the carrot can always be replaced by the stick.

SIMILARLY, the impact of the renewal of diplomatic ties on Jews inside the Soviet Union does not lend itself to any simple determination. Many Soviet Jews are vehemently opposed to a reinstatement of relations without watertight assurances by the Kremlin that Soviet Jews will not suffer as a consequence.

One cannot, after all but ponder the fact that the "Golden Years" of Soviet-Israel relations, 1948 and 1949 were also the "Black Years" of Soviet Jewry — arrests, executions, anti-Semitic propaganda culminating in the Doctors' Plot. Conversely, the worsening of relations with Israel in the mid- and late 50s was accompanied by the persecution and deportation of thousands of Jewish (including Yiddish) writers inside the Soviet Union.

Those who question the urgent need for normal relations from Israel's viewpoint — and recall that the rapid development of the Jewish national movement in the Soviet Union followed the Six Day War, and further contrast the mere trickle of Jews permitted to leave the Soviet Union before the severance of ties, with the sizable number permitted to emigrate to Israel afterwards.

But the issue is rather more complex than that. The anti-Jewish campaign of 1948-53 coincided with attacks on "bourgeois nationalists" of all nationalities, most of whom had no connection whatever with Zionism or Jews. Again, the rehabilitation of the Jewish writers came during the "thaw," when many victims of Stalinism (not only Jews) were being mentioned or published for the first time in years.

Moreover, the growth of Zionist activity in the Soviet Union should be viewed not only in the context of broken relations with Israel, but also in the quite different context of the growth, in the late 60s, of the democratic movement — of which Jewish nationalism was in some ways an offshoot.

Coincidence as well as calculation undoubtedly played a role in some of these paradoxical developments. Inner confusion and conflict inside the Soviet leadership no doubt also played a significant role, although one that is not easy to analyse. What, indeed, could have been less predictable than that the most violent attacks on Zionism and Israel in the Soviet Union should come just before the gates were opened to let so many Jews out to Israel?

TO CONCLUDE, the restoration of "normal" relations with the Soviet Union is not an opportunity to be shrugged off lightly: an Israeli legation in Moscow, with all the possible exchanges and visits which could follow, as well as the unquestionable symbolic value of an Israeli "presence" for Russian Jews should not be underestimated. Nor should the symbolism of a renewal of ties be dismissed out of hand: this is, after all, traditionally regarded as a sign of a relaxation of tensions and not as a danger signal.

At the same time, Israel would do well to enter any renewed relationship with the Soviet Union with open eyes and with a clear realization that, interpreted as narrowly as it was by the Soviets in the past, "normalcy" is but a small strand in the great web of politics.

READERS' LETTERS

RABBI KAHANE

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — For your readers' information, I would like to quote from the publication "Kahane" of January 1977, Vol. 1, No. 1. In the last paragraph of a "Statement of purpose," the following is printed: "Faith in God and the courage to act with what we have, will bring the redemption and we are called upon to immediately do the following: 'Join the liberated lands of 1967 to the State of Israel; begin in all restricted Jewish settlement in all parts of the land; complete the exchange of Jewish and Arab population begun in 1948 by preparing a comprehensive emigration plan for all Arabs of the Land of Israel; gather Jewish genius and talent to finally rid ourselves of dependence on any ally through the creation of nuclear, biological and chemical 'non-conventional' weapons. 'Faith in God and the courage to be His holy people. That is the Jewish idea.'"

I thought your readers would want to read this in advance of the forthcoming election in which Rabbi Meir Kahane seeks a seat in the Knesset. His election would be a tragedy for Israel and for the Jewish people.

WOMEN'S PAR

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — I think Helga Dudman's article, "Women and Politics" is one of the best I read. The reason I write you is if Ms. Dudman neglected to my name as one of the (No. 4) just as an oversight little awkward about it he herself said: "All five he that are soft and gentle..." being gentle is not always approach: look what happens.

Election Commentary

What It's All About

DESPITE THE WELTER of factional and mushroom bed flood of demagogic promises, and the blare of arrogant by the Likud and the Democratic Movement for Change real issue in these elections is very simple. It is this:

Will the electorate give the Alignment sufficient str to form a strong and coherent Government, with Shimon as Prime Minister, capable of bold and responsible action to tackle our difficult and urgent problems?

Or will there be no alternative to another rickety coalition more unstable than its predecessors, with minority holding the country to ransom in order to enforce its rejected by the electorate?

Israel cannot be effectively led by the Likud, a jigsaw factions held together by antagonism to Labour, or by a h assembled assortment of heterogeneous elements like the — each of which relies on the glorification of its insider leader.

The Alignment confidently appeals for support on basis of the soundness of its policies and the quality of team, which combines experience and new blood; Sh Sephardim and Ashkenazim; a notable contingent of wo and representatives of town and countryside in all the regions of Israel.
